

Acorn on the World Wide Web

September 1995

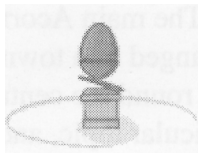

Acorn now has its own Web site. For those who have not visited it yet the URL (Unique Resource Location) is: <http://www.acorn.co.uk>. The introductory page has pointers to companies in the Acorn Computer Group, where you can find information about ARM, Online Media, and Acorn's parent company Olivetti Telemedia, as well as Acorn Computers of course. Rather than having boring old text-based pages, we've tried to liven ours up a bit with what we hope is a friendlier graphical front-end, based on the idea of a small town. The main Acorn Computers page is arranged as a town square with various buildings round the centre. Each page focuses on a particular topic, and is developing in its own way.

The Clan section features a private area where we will put information available only to Clan members. This area is password protected. Each Clan member has their own unique username and password. Please do not pass yours on to other people who have not joined the Clan. To access the private area, key in your username, your Clan Membership Number, password and your last name as it appears on your membership card (but using lower-case characters). Currently the private area includes a registration form for the FileCore Beta Program and other information which has already been mailed to the Clan. Here is a description of the pages (taken from the Web site).
